Setting camp outside the great walls, they laid siege to the city. In one night, a thousand years had vanished and all in the city lay dead. No, not all. # THE DARKEST ROAD

As the great sadness spreads over the land and the darkness draws ever closer the whispers of the BLACK WANDERER. Far to the north, over the Darklen Moor and beyond the Eagleshorn, he dwells within 'The Pinnacle' dispensing his awesome magicks of which the spreading darkness is but one.

As the sky grows greyer, a mysterious Stranger enters your village and tells of the Black Wanderer and of the darkness. He tells how he may be defeated, of the SILENT SONG and the bearer of this power - YOU!

The Silent Song was a gift from your father, an elf from beyond the Forest of Forgiveness, and your mother, Sharra, a princess of the winged elves from the south shores. For many hours the stranger instructs you in its use but warns you must use it with care.

You must now take the Darkest Road and seek out the Black Wanderer and then use the magic of the Silent Song to send him back to the festering pit that spewed him forth.

CORYA THE WARRIOR-SAGE: DRAGON BY ANTHONY COLLINS

Seldom would a priest of the Temple of Wisdom venture forth into the world of man, but this is the tale of one such man, of Corya the Warrior-Sage. Having left the mountain Corya travelled within the realm of Tannan for many years. Knowledge of a Warrior-Sage leaving the mountain spread like wild-fire throughout Tannan, but seldom was he seen unless the need was great and he would appear, always where he was needed most, always where only he could help.

The small sleeping village of Ermahal was awoken by the tremendous roar of the dragon. Within minutes the village was devastated, buildings were ablaze, lighting the midnight sky with a red glow. Everywhere villagers ran, none seeming to know which direction to run, all trying to escape. The dragon lifted and flew upwards, circling the village, eyeing its devastation. Several more times it circled above the village then content, made its way towards the mountains, the darkness cloaked it and it was seen no more. The surviving villagers gathered at the great hall, itself without a roof and one corner badly damaged, but as safe a place as any. There they prayed for help, prayed for hope of a miracle.

Atop a small hill overlooking Ermahal stood Corya looking down at the devastation, he heard their prayers, he had come...

PUZZLED BY TONY MARSH

"... to sleep - perchance to dream."

But even the Bard himself, for all his great imagination, never had a dream like this one!

It's a crazy, mixed-up world (as most dreams are) and a place where not everything is as it may first appear!

And there's only one escape - to locate six missing pieces of a rather 'unusual' jigsaw, to complete the puzzle; and then ... but that's for you to discover!

Dragon : Corya the Warrior - Sage.

CORYA THE WARRIOR-SAGE: DRAGON by Anthony Collins

Upon the holy mountain of Tanel-An-Uthen stands the citadel of the Ancient Ones. A fortress impenetrable by normal means, within the few are taught the way of the Warrior-Sages. Taken from their families when young the new priests of the Temple of Wisdom would learn the virtues of wisdom, the prowess of the warrior and the power of the sages. As they reached manhood they took the final test, the trial of Eutar, the death-walk. To perish now would mean oblivion for their soul, to survive would earn them the title of Warrior-Sage.

Seldom would a priest venture forth into the world of man, but this is the tale of one such man, of Corya the Warrior-Sage. Having left the mountain Corya travelled within the realm of Iannan for many years. Knowledge of a Warrior-Sage leaving the mountain spread like wild-fire throughout Iannan, but seldom was he seen unless the need was great and he would appear, always where he was needed most, always where only he could help.....

.....Barley shut up the tavern a little before midnight and slowly made his way to the kitchens. Pouring himself a tankard of warm ale and seating himself in his favourite chair he settled back to ease his aching back. Exhausted from a hard days work he dozed in his chair, his head nodded and slowly dropped, resting his chin on his chest he slept.

The screaming from the village woke Barley with a start. He quickly got to his feet and the half-full tankard clunked as it fell to the floor. He half ran, half walked to the front of the tavern and opened the arched door that led to the village. All around pandemonium struck the village, buildings were ablaze, lighting the midnight sky with a red glow. Everywhere villagers ran, none seeming to know which direction to run, all trying to escape from something, but what. Horror gripped him as out of the sky, silhouetted by the fires all around, swept the dragon. An inhuman cry screeched above the sounds of panic and the crackling of the fire. Barley, shaking with fear, was rooted to the spot as the monster swept down towards him. A second soul-rendering cry was the last thing Barley heard as a ball of flame engulfed him, burning him to ash within seconds.

The dragon lifted and flew upwards, circling the village, eyeing its devastation. Several more times it circled above the village then content, made its way towards the mountains, the darkness cloaked it and it was seen no more.

The village was a shambles. Villagers spent the remainder of the night putting out fires, trying to stop the red menace spreading to the few untouched buildings. At first light the true cost was apparent. Three-quarters of the village was burnt to the ground or unsafe and crumbling. Many villagers were dead, burnt trying to save their homes, or simply engulfed by the beast as it attacked. The surviving villagers gathered at the great hall, itself without a roof and one corner badly damaged, but as safe a place as any. There they prayed for help, prayed for hope of a miracle.

Atop a small hill overlooking Ermahal stood Corya looking down at the devastation, he heard their prays, he had come....

CURSED BE THE CITY

The Legend

Tal-Bha-Sair, the wise one, reached up for the phial and threw it into the flames. Once again he saw the City of Gold, though he knew not where it lay. For a hundred days, he had watched, from time when the land was filled by the dark riders carrying the scarlet pendants marked with the Raven. Setting camp outside the great walls, they laid siege to the City.

For a hundred nights, the scene had changed little, but this night was different for the Raven flew from the masts in the City, and the streets ran red with blood. In one night, a thousand years had vanished and all the City lay dead.

No, not all. Deep in the palace, Prince Ashar survived, waiting to die at the hands of the torturer, his eyes black with desire for revenge. Looking further, Tal-Bha-Sair saw a deeper evil that would be set free - an evil so terrible that none would escape.

"Let the Raven enjoy its' victory, for short-lived shall it be and then will pray that they had been slayed this night."

And then dousing the fire, he vowed to watch no longer....

Bored Of The Rings

At last, the classic Spectrum 'spooof' adventure comes to the Commodore 64. The game that launched the 'spooof-adventure' and spawned more 'clones' than any other game in the history of adventures is now available on the Commodore 64.

Can you guide the ring-bearer, Fordo in his quest to destroy the 'one-ring'? Only with the help of his friends, Spam, Pimply and Murky, can you possibly succeed! Well, maybe not, but at least have fun trying!

During your travels you will meet a host of characters; Smelrond the Elf, Goldbum, Grandalf, Aragont, Kremlins, the Pixie, and the Balhog!

Written by Fergus McNeill using the Quill.

Converted to the Commodore by Anthony Collins.

Commodore Version is in three parts (you will need a PASSWORD, given at the end of each part in order to start the next one) and is available in disk or tape form for £4.00.

The Spectrum version is available from Zenobi Software.
