The Moon 2062.

Standing in a blinding white corridor, left alone for a moment by a Guard who, until a few moments ago, had been interrogating you after your arrival on the MoonBase.

Mischievously you nudge open a door and look into an almost bare room. Bare that is, but for the blazing white light that shines down onto an altar-like platform. So bright that for a moment you are blinded, unable to see even though you are staring into the room, determined to discover its use. Then your eyes become accustomed to the light.

But somehow you wish they hadn't.

There in the spill of the light a group of white coated people stand around the table, all eyes fixed on a Citizen lying prostrate across it, his eyes wild and staring ahead as though he were confronting death.

In a wave of confusion questions ripple around the strangers, their mouths blurring into one sound. But the Citizen seems to collect them all and answers trail from his arid lips in a monotone voice.

In an instant his inhuman face becomes an imprint on your mind, the shadow of his wildly staring eyes just behind yours, an image that lingers even when you close the door.

The shadow is so close to the surface that the Guard makes an inward shudder as he returns, and speeds him on his way as he escorts you to the exit.

Your A Dark Sky Over Paradise package contains the game disk or cassette and a leaflet welcoming you to your new home.

OFFICE

A window behind my desk blinked a neon message for a moment, then dulled. The office pausing in darkness only to reappear like a rabbit pulled out of a magician's top hat as the neon blinked again.

Rain battered at the windows noisily.

DEAD END

A Nightmare waits for Philip Marlowe. Is Miles Dunbar's death the suicide the police believe it is? How much does his widow really know? One thing's for sure; if he doesn't enter the storm that grips Los Angeles - he'll never find out! Though if he does, he'd better be sure of himself - or he'll be dead!

"... the game has all the atmosphere of an old private eye movie ..." C+VG.
